

Supervisor hopeful understands Forks

Forks Township is on the edge of no return. It has too much traffic. It has too few ways in and out. Runaway development is straining our school system. Forks is in dire need of supervisors who understand the problems and concerns of the people who actually live here.

I've met one of the candidates for supervisor who I believe can do the job. James Wideman is passionate about Forks and about farmland protection. Like you and me, he is a victim of the traffic mess.

I saw his passion in action through his time on the planning commission. He stood up to the Kings Mill developers. He said "no" to them. He continues to say "no" to them. He attends supervisor and planning commission meetings. He knows what's going on and what needs change. He has integrity. He wants open records.

I want a supervisor who will say "no" when it's the right thing to do. I want records easily accessible to the public. I want a dreamer and a realist in office! I like his frankness.

One of my two votes for supervisor will go to James Wideman. He's willing and qualified to represent the people of Forks.

He didn't get our town into the mess it's in but he's willing to "put himself at the front of this speeding bus called Forks" and to do his best to make a better community.

Forks needs independent thinkers like Wideman!
